LIGHT IN DARK PLACES

The Central Union Mission in Shea's Court

and the "Division." A Gradual Change Going On—Some Efforts in Opposition to the Campaign of the Workers.

The Central Union Mission is carrying war into Africa nowadays with a ven-geance. It is engaged in a vigorous campaign against vice and wrong-doing. Two skirmishes are now in progress in separated sections of the city, but each with a most unsavory reputation for peace and morality. Shea's Court, down in South Washington, and the area known as the "Division" are the scenes of nightly engagements between agers of the mission feel the tide of victory is turning their way. The special tory is turning their way. The special effort that is now making in what might at first seem these hopeless fields is to show their denizens that they are leading unprofitable lives, from a physical, material standpoint. Once their thought has been arrested and their minds have been directed toward the fact that they are doing themselves needless injury by continuing to exist in defiance of all the laws of morality, it is believed the first great step forward has been taken. The test is comparatively easy for such zealous workers as the mission sends into these quarters. Shea's court was one of the most notorious regions in Washington. It has been the scene of more reckless opposition to law and order and has during late months been unusually prominent before the public. It was at one time known by the less cuphonious name of "Louse alley," and runs from 114 4½ street to 325 Maryland avenue southwest. It was formerly thickly populated with denizens of the lowest order, and a less promising field for Christian work could scarcely be imagined. But it is peculiarity of the workers of the Central Union Mission that they are always more eager to labor among the most fallen of their kind, and it is from them that they draw the most earnest converts to better lives.

The renovation of the court has now been The renovation of the court has now been in progress several months, and has been accomplished by means of a little mission that has been established on Maryland avanue, very near the mouth of the alley. A steady transformation is going on in the entire section, not only in the class of people who are living in the houses in the vicinity, but in the general atmosphere of the ple who are living in the houses in the vicinity, but in the general atmosphere of the place. The owner of most of the property, in the court is earnestly in sympathy with the movement, and is lending efficient aid by causing changes for the better among the tenants. Gradually the houses that have been filled by immoral persons have been rented to a more upright class of men and women, although poor, who are helping to give a new character to the place:

helping to give a place.

The mission is open all the time, and is in charge of earnest workers, who give their neighbors every encouragement to enter and rest, if not to take part in the services that are held every evening. Meanwhile, there is a subcurrent of work helps done with individuals, and the numbers done with individuals, and the numbers of the services.

being done with individuals, and the number of conversions reported from this branch is really surprising.

A similar kind of work is being done in the "Division." Some months ago the board of managers of the mission decided to enter this forbidding field, and in prosecution of this decision midnight meetings were held in the streets. Then a room was hired in the heart of the region, to be used as a rendezvous and a shelter for the workers. From the start the effort was attended with the success of attracting the attention of the inhabitants. Curlosity led to interest, and already this interest has been awakened into real concern in several cases.

The workers are going on the belief that it is better to rescue one individual from a life of shame than to punish a hundred for infractions of the laws of the municipality. There has now been one case of genuine repentance. A young woman who had chosen this wretched life has been led into a pure association by the agents of the mission, and is now living in respectable society, married and happy.

As soon as this movement became known, certain persons, with interests of a baser sort, set about to defeat the plans of the mission people, and actually succeeded in getting the room away from the workers, leaving them without a footing. But these earnest people were not discouraged. They went to work at once to re-establish themselves, and, by operating through a real estate firm, succeeded in getting a certain house of bad resort cleared of its immoral tenants, and took a lease of the property. As soon as the identity and character of the new occupants became known an effort that is described by the managers of the mission as "frantic and amusing" was made to influence the owner to cancel the lease, but he stood to his bargain. He was told that if the mission were allowed to obtain a foothold in the "Division" the regular tenants would be driven away, and the houses would stand idle. An offer, it is said, of eighty per cent increase in the rental was made, provided the mission. There is no lack of room, but there is no money to pay the expense of boarding the women while they are being fitted for domestic service or other honorable self-supporting work. The fund has been provided for this special object, and it is difficult to meet the cost of this work, but the employment is not lucrative. Although p
